Group asks for prison inquiry

By John Walblay
Staff Writer

Members of the Prisoners of Conscience requested Thursday that a third party investigate and analyze an outbreak of sickness at the Marion Penitentiary and make a determination on the condition of the water being used at the prison.

The group held a press conference to voice concerns of alleged inhumane treatment of prisoners because of health conditions at the penitentiary.

Main concerns of the group are that the water being used at the penitentiary is from Crab Orchard Lake — water that the group claims is tainted by toxic PCB's and possibly concentrations of heavy metals. Another concern is that there is an epidemic of giardia lamblia, a parasitic disease transmitted through food and water.

Randy Davis, public relations officer for the penitentiary, has previously claimed the water meets the standards set by the government and that the water is tested on a weekly basis.

Davis could not be reached for comment Thursday night.

The Rev. S. Michael Yasutake said that the penitentiary previously acknowledged that giardia infected some of the inmates, but he said the prison now claims the cases have been treated.

Yasutake said officials from the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta came to the penitentiary and reported that they found no evidence of an epidemic of giardia.

Lourdes Lugo of Chicago said she has visited the prison several times to visit her uncle Oscar Lopez, who Lugo said is in need of medical treatment.

Lugo said her uncle tested positive for giardia three months ago. She said he was given medication for one month and then requested additional medication about one-and-a-half months ago, but did not receive it.

"It's not only from word-of-mouth of a prisoner that you see whether or not their health is affected or not," Lugo said.

"You see the effects at a visit, a drastic weight loss from one month to the other, a skin rash that leaves scars on the arms, inflammation of the stomach," she said.

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Bush saluted the 70th anniversary of Neil Armstrong's first, tentative steps on the moon Thursday by setting America on a course of returning to the lunar surface and rocketing astronauts to Mars.

Minority enrollment decreasing at SIU-C

By Lisa Miller
Staff Writer

According to a report from the Illinois Board of Higher Education, minority enrollment in Illinois colleges and universities is on the decline.

The report states that in the 1987 fall semester at SIU-C there were 4,358 minority undergraduate students enrolled. By the 1988 fall semester there were only 4,111 minority undergraduate students enrolled despite an increase in overall undergraduate enrollment statewide.

At SIU-E, there were 1,374 minority students during the 1987 fall semester and 1,353 in the 1988 fall semester, a decline of 21 students.

Chancellor Lawrence K. Pettit said he was "frustrated" with the status of minority enrollment at the University.

"Minority enrollment has been on the decline at SIU for a few years now," Pettit said. "These numbers may not seem very large right now, but put with the numbers from the past, they really add up."

Pettit said the problem was successfully recruiting minorities, as well as keeping them once they have enrolled.

"We must look for new ways to recruit minority students," Pettit said.

SIU has been reaching the minority students in the suburban areas, but there hasn't been much success reaching them in the inner city area, Pettit said.

By concentrating on public school systems rather than private ones, more minority students could be reached, Pettit

SIOUX CITY, Iowa (UPI) — Investigators searched for more bodies Thursday and examined the wreckage of the United Airlines DC-10 that crashed in flames with 293 people aboard. One official said the fan section was gone from one engine.

Jim Burnett, a member of the National Transportation Safety Board and spokesman for crash investigators, said the missing fan section was thought to be from the tail engine of the three-engine plane, but would not confirm that.

Aircraft pieces were found miles from the site of Wednesday's crash, some as far away as 70 miles. But Burnett said the pieces had not been matched to the doomed plane, and wouldn't say whether the fan section was among the pieces.

He also declined to say how a missing fan section might have played a part in the crash of Flight 232, which went down with 293 people aboard about 4 p.m. Wednesday just short of the runway at the Sioux City airport after the pilot radioed he had lost hydraulic control of the aircraft.

It was still unclear Thursday how many people were killed in the fiery crash. In Chicago, United released a survivor list showing 184 of the 293 people aboard the flight survived. But a spokesman for Iowa Gov. Terry Branstad said there were 176 survivors.

Burnett told a news conference that the pilot, A.C. Haynes, radioed controllers in Minneapolis at 3:16 p.m. Wednesday that he had lost the No. 2 engine — the tail engine. He said the pilot first radioed he had no control, then radioed he had regained some control, but later declared an in-flight emergency as he fought to control the plane.

He said at 3:17 p.m. the pilot reported he lost hydraulics — which enable the pilot to control the plane. The pilot was directed to fly to Dubuque. At 3:20 p.m. he declared an emergency and was directed toward Sioux City, Burnett said.

The NTSB has 19 investigators divided into eight teams to investigate specific areas including the engines, aeronautic systems, survival factors, aircraft operation, human factors and air traffic control, Burnett said.

He said two groups would be formed in Washington, D.C., Friday to analyze the two flight data recorders, which were recovered from the wreckage. He said another group in San Francisco would analyze maintenance records of the plane.

Burnett said there was no talk of grounding other DC-10s

The College of Human Resources may be abolished and its academic programs moved to other SIU-C colleges if a proposal is approved by SIU-C trustees.

Strikes in Russia spread, cost of losses increasing

MOSCOW (UPI) — Soviet miners' strikes spread across the nation's coal belts from above the Arctic Circle to central Asia Thursday despite appeals from President Mikhail Gorbachev for an end to the stoppages that are costing at least $8 million a day. The strikes, the most protracted and widespread labor unrest of Gorbachev's four years of leadership, mushroomed because of fears that an accord reached earlier with Siberian miners would not cover all regions of the country.

Chadian president holds talks with Gadhafi

PARIS (UPI) — Chadian President Hissene Habre left Ndjamena Thursday for a 48-hour trip to Bamako, Mali, to meet Libyan leader Col. Moammar Gadhafi and discuss their dispute over the Ouzou Strip, the Chadian Embassy said. The encounter, arranged through the Organization of African Unity, would be the first between the two leaders since the war between their countries over the dispute. Malian President Moussa Traore currently is president of the OAU. The Chadian Embassy in Paris said Traore set up the meeting "in the context of resolutions of the Panafrikan organization on the Libya-Chad territorial difference." Chadian officials said Habre left Ndjamena for Bamako Thursday morning.

Congressmen claim grapefruit boycott unfair

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Two Florida congressmen met with Korean and Taiwanese officials Thursday, charging that their boycott of U.S. grapefruit amounts to an unfair trade practice. The Korean Citizens' Alliance for Consumer Protection recently reported the presence of the chemical Alar in California and Florida grapefruit, setting off a Korean and Taiwanese boycott. The result is that 400,000 cartons of U.S. grapefruit sit on Taipei docks and 68,000 cartons are quarantined in Korea.

Administration opposed to needle exchanges

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Officials of needle-exchange programs intended to stop the spread of AIDS among drug addicts said Thursday a Bush administration decision to oppose their efforts is an example of a "let them die" policy. Health and Human Services Secretary Louis Sullivan, who earlier had expressed support for local needle-exchange efforts, told a House subcommittee Wednesday the administration is now "strongly opposed" to needle exchanges. In the programs, drug users are given clean needles in exchange for used ones to discourage the sharing of needles, one of the ways AIDS is spread.

950-pound bomb falls from jet, creates scare

WALDO, Fla. (UPI) — Margie Bowers could hardly believe her eyes as she watched a 950-pound bomb that fell from a Navy jet hit the ground outside her house and bounce towards her. The bomb, which turned out to be a dud, landed about 300 feet from Bowers' home Wednesday and skipped directly towards the bedroom window where she was watching. However, it struck a tree and was deflected over the house and into a field where it finally came to a stop. "I'm going to go outside every year and kiss that tree," Bowers said. "I made it by the grace of God."

Edgar predicts tax increase to be continued into 1991

CHICAGO (UPI) — Secretary of State Jim Edgar, who is expected to seek the 1990 GOP gubernatorial nomination, says it is likely the temporary income tax increase approved by the Legislature last session will be extended in 1991. Edgar (in an interview on WMAQ-AM's "The Reporters") said Thursday the alternative to continuing the tax hike, which was imposed for two years, is to cut spending. "The Legislature in 1991 is not going to take money away from education and local governments, so there's a good chance of it being continued," Edgar predicted.

Jazz band features unusual harmonies, original material

By Theresa Livingston
Entertainment Editor

A syzygy is a pair of opposites or an event in astronomy where two opposing points in the orbit of a heavenly body are in conjunction with the sun, according to Webster's New World Dictionary.

However, at this University it's acquired a third definition. It's now also considered a musical term.

A jazz term, to be more precise, for Syzygy is the name of Carbondale's newest group, which was scheduled to debut at Thursday night's Sunset Concert.

However, even though Syzygy can be called a jazz group, member Michael Kruge said that's about as far as the classification goes.

"We play some straight ahead bebop, but we also branch into some experimental stuff. We are influenced by music from other cultures and genres, but it's all distilled into a jazz idiom," he said.

Kruge, a faculty member of the geology department, said the group first formed in March. The name was adopted from a composition previously written by one of the members in honor of a Syzygy in 1987. The group members formed their own conjunction, for, although the six members had previously played together in different bands, this effort marked the first time the musicians had thought about playing all original material, using their own compositions.

Besides Kruge, who plays the tenor violin, the group is comprised of three music faculty members: Bob Allison on trumpet and flugel horn, Harold Miller on bass and Frank Stemper, the University's composer-in-residence, on piano. Music students Scott Oller and Tom Hensold on percussion and drums round out the group.

The group practices frequently, ironing out the arrangements and the timing. Stemper noted that, although some of the music is technically difficult, having in-house composers helped things fall into place.

"We not only know what's written on the page, we know how it should be played," he said.

Featuring unusual harmonies, a lot of original work and diverse influences, the group's music may be different than what Carbondale audiences are used to, Kruge said.

"It isn't heavily electric or programmed. Amplified acoustic best describes its sound," he said.

Allison elaborated on Kruge's thoughts, saying the group had a different approach to performing, as well as composing.

"It's music that requires a great deal of thought on the listener's part and a high degree of craftsmanship on the part of the musician," he said.

The group has been together for a short time, but what lies ahead for Syzygy? Kruge said the group hopes to record an album at WSU studios.

However, although playing live is important to the members of Syzygy, he said he doesn't consider the group a "bar band."

"Ultimately, we'd like to go on a tour of Midwestern College Campuses. The jazz scene there has always been a small but extremely devoted one. The bars are more for rock bands," he said.

He said the group has specific goals, not the least of which is playing a vital part in creating a higher regard for the entire scope of jazz music within the area.

"Carbondale doesn't have much of a jazz scene at all. We'd like to change that," he said.

Whatever lies ahead for the group, Miller said the members of the group derive "a great satisfaction" from playing their own music.

"If it wasn't fun, we wouldn't do it. Think about it—how many people actually enjoy their work?" he asked.

Allison agreed.

"We play what we want to play. We're non-conformists—we wouldn't do it any other way. We're looking for quality, not quantity, in our music."

Skateboarders need own area to practice

RAIN OR SHINE, snow or sleet, mail carriers and skateboarders share a common trait: Dedication to their craft. Mail carriers, however, have a slight advantage. They have somewhere to deliver their mail. Skateboarders, at least those on campus, are not quite as fortunate.

Campus police are in the process of formulating a policy to regulate skateboarding in certain areas of the campus. Evidently, complaints about skaters getting in the way, colliding with bikes and bodies and creating noise in the library area have taken hold.

ACCORDING TO Robert Harris, director of University Security, people have been hurt as seriously as broken bones by skaters.

We agree that regulations should be made. Bikers are restricted; skateboarders should be also.

The regulations will be enforced beginning this fall. Robert Harris, director of SIU-C security, said he hopes to work with the skaters in developing policy. The creation of designated skateboard areas is an option he introduced.

THE RECREATION Center has facilities for several activities not considered mainstream: A room for martial arts, a special wall for climbing practice and a frisbee golf course. These facilities seem to keep students from kicking down walls, climbing buildings and breaking windows with frisbees.

Maybe an area for skateboarding would prevent some problems. The University should consider providing facilities to accommodate skateboarders.

IN THE MEANTIME, skaters who use their boards for transportation on campus should be restricted to certain areas. Skateboarding through a crowd of students at high speeds inevitably will cause accidents. Most students are hurrying to get from one building to another between classes and don't want to dodge skaters on their way.

Pedestrians have walkways, bikers have paths. Skateboarders use both. Pedestrians should enjoy the right to walk safely on walkways.

We support the University Security in their plan to regulate skateboarding on campus.

HOW TO SUBMIT A LETTER TO THE EDITOR:

Vague characterization not the issue

As a female, when I first read Mark Beaubien's letter announcing that SIU-C had the most unfriendly female population in the nation, I was offended — an instinctive reaction.

I was offended because the word 'unfriendly' has a negative connotation. No woman wants to believe that she possesses that quality of blatant disregard for the feelings of others that the word seems to encompass.

As I read on however, I realized that what Mr. Beaubien meant to say was not 'unfriendly,' but 'uninterested.'

I came to this conclusion after reading it was only conversations with male students that Beaubien used for research in his scientific study.

Unfriendliness is not a behavior limited to interaction with the opposite sex. Females can be unfriendly to other females as well as to males.

Neglecting this small fact, Beaubien's letter led me to believe that friendliness just wasn't the issue.

Beaubien went on to deduce that since the men he talked to didn't possess physically undesirable traits, "the problem must be with the attitudes of the women in general."

In essence — they look ok. What more do you want?

Viewpoint
Alicia Hill
Staff writer

I'd say it was a rather large assumption for Beaubien to make.

Never-the-less, if what Beaubien says is true, and as he stated, his sentiment is shared by the majority of men on campus, I would like to respond by way of advice toward inspiring the interest of a female.

To begin with — don't try. At least don't try too hard. This seems to be the key.

Trying too hard may also be the problem for those who agree with Mr. Beaubien.

Females can generally tell what a man's motives are from word one. If you're really interested in befriending a female, just be yourself — spontaneous and sincere.

If you approach a woman with rehearsed lines and sleazy motives, chances are she will probably be defensive and cautious. She should be.

Consider Larry, the character on the television series "Three's Company" whose role was to do nothing but try to pick up any woman he could. I ask you, for all of his elaborate attempts, was a girl ever once interested in him?

No. And it doesn't take much to figure out why. Females want to be recognized as individuals, not just a collective group of hair and skin waiting to be pursued by men like Larry.

There's just not much interesting about a man who's only goal is to find a woman.

I am not implying that this is the only goal of the men who agree with Mr. Beaubien. I am only suggesting that maybe that is the impression you are giving.

Just be yourself, pursue your own interests and let things happen.

Sometimes females are just shy. Sometimes they're afraid of being raped. Sometimes they just aren't interested.

Friendliness often evolves from friendship. If friendliness really is what Beaubien and those who agree with him are looking for, I suggest that they evaluate their behavior, not their appearances, before making the assumption that the females at SIU-C are so annoyingly unfriendly.

Ultimate goal of society is unconditional equality

The ultimate goal of intelligent, civilized people is to obtain unconditional equality for everyone. Accordingly, we must remember that what applies to white people must also apply to black people.

Conversely, that which applies to black (excuse me, African American) people must also apply to white people. A violation of either of the preceding principles could only be construed as discriminatory.

Therefore, I am now requesting that I and all others like me be referred to as European-Americans. A refusal to recognize my deep European roots could severely offend my "Caucasoid" heritage and result in a tidal wave of misanthropy. — Mark Beaubien, graduate student in mechanical engineering.

Burris says he might not run for Democratic nomination

CHICAGO (UPI) — Comptroller Roland Burris said Thursday he was being pressured to stay out of the Democratic gubernatorial race and indicated he might do just that.

Burris (during a taping of WBBM-AM's "At Issue") said that for the good of the party, he may forget about challenging Attorney General Neil Hartigan for the Democratic nomination.

Hartigan announced Tuesday he will seek the Democratic nomination for governor, the first official candidate in the race. Incumbent Gov. James Thompson announced last week he would not seek an unprecedented fifth term.

Burris, who has been comptroller since 1978, said he will make a decision by Labor Day — and possibly within two weeks.

"I will consider putting my personal desires on hold for the good of the party," Burris said after the taping. "I have to consider that two tough individuals — that's Hartigan and Burris — clashing heads, when the Republicans may not have a primary, it may create some damage," between Democratic supporters, and lead to them losing the race.

Burris, the first black to be elected to a statewide office in Illinois, said he would be tougher competition for any Republican than Hartigan because he has insight on the state's key problems.

"If you have to take on Thompson, who buried the bodies, I know where the bodies are buried," he said, adding that leading GOP gubernatorial candidate Jim Edgar "doesn't know where the bodies are buried."

Edgar, Illinois Secretary of State, has not formally announced his candidacy for the Republican nomination but is expected to do so on Aug. 8.

Burris made it clear that he has not completely ruled out a race for governor, saying he has "a lot of supporters out there." He said he has campaign pledges of $800,000, of which he has collected $200,000.

during the investigation.

Besides the NTSB, the Federal Aviation Administration had investigators on the scene, as did United, engine manufacturer General Electric, aircraft manufacturer McDonnell Douglas, and four aircraft unions.

Gov. Branstad toured Sioux Gateway Airport Thursday, where workers were looking for more bodies.

"There's still a lot of them out there," said a Sioux City police officer patrolling the runway perimeter.

Branstad said he spoke to Haynes, a 33-year veteran of United.

"First of all, he was very emotional about it," Branstad said. "He expressed dismay that that many lives were lost. Yet, people say he did a phenomenal job."

Branstad said Haynes told him air traffic controllers in Sioux City did an outstanding job and he also praised rescue personnel.

"He was really appreciative.

of the rescuers because they were trapped in the engine compartment of the airplane and had to be pried out of there," Branstad said.

The rest of the cockpit crew — First Officer W.R. Records, with United since 1969; and Flight Engineer D.J. Dvorak, who joined the airline in 1986 — also survived, as did the plane's eight flight attendants.

The plane spent Tuesday night in Philadelphia, where it received a routine inspection. The plane was en route from Denver to Chicago and Philadelphia at the time of the crash.

The 15-year-old wide-body jetliner was manufactured by the Douglas Aircraft Co. of McDonnell Douglas. Jim Reed, a corporate spokesman in St. Louis, declined comment Thursday on what might have led to the crash.

"At this point, everything is pure speculation. That's why the NTSB team is being put in place," he said. "Unfortunately, with something like this, the facts are slow in coming."

He said he did not know whether the rear engine might have failed.

"I couldn't give you any indication whether that's what happened. It's too early at this point," he said.

As the pilot tried to make an emergency landing, the aircraft split into three major parts and hurtled down the runway in flames, cartwheeling and rolling and leaving some passengers upside down when it stopped.

One survivor, Charles Martz, said, "I saw people with their clothes torn off. They were horribly mangled people. There were at least two dozen survivors in various stages. About two dozen of us walked away with just mud and shock."

Another survivor, David Lansberger, said that when the plane hit the ground and began to break apart, "I just remember thinking, 'This is what it's like to die.'"

Bush declared, "I'm proposing a long-range continuing commitment."

"First, for the coming decade ... space station Freedom. And next, for the new century, back to the moon, back to the future and this time back to stay," Bush said. "And then a journey into tomorrow, a journey to another planet. A manned mission to Mars."

"The pathway to the stars begins where it did 20 years ago with you, the American people," he said.

The Soviet Union is already planning to land cosmonauts on the red planet.

Bush called on Vice President Dan Quayle, chairman of the National Space Council, to develop specifics but did not set a deadline. NASA's plans call for the space station to become operative by the late 1990s.

"The time has come to look beyond brief encounters. The solar system and yes, the permanent settlement of space," Bush said. "We must commit ourselves to a future where Americans and citizens of all nations will live and work in space."

Richard Truly, administrator of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, said a crash program to build a moon colony as opposed to the approach proposed by Bush, could cost $100 billion over 10 years.

"I don't know what the budgets will be, but I can assure you that they are affordable, I believe, in the total context and over a long period of time," said Truly, a former shuttle astronaut.

Truly said NASA is already "fighting hard" to keep the space station alive in the cost-conscious Congress, and House Speaker Thomas Foley, D-Wash., warned, "We need both vision and enthusiasm on the goal side and responsibility and specificity on the resource side."

Politics, aside, the day belonged to Apollo 11.

At 8:56 p.m. on July 20, 1969, Armstrong set foot in the Sea of Tranquility with the immortal words, "That's one small step for man, one giant leap for mankind."

For that brief moment, the people of planet Earth were united as never before or since, witnesses to humanity's arrival on another world.

said. Recruitment also could be done through social organizations that have minority members.

"We can't take the attitude that our job begins after students graduate from high school," Pettit said in press conference after a Board of Trustees meeting. "We must start to reach all students while they are still in high school."

Overall, black enrollment has declined nearly 15 percent from 1984 to 1988 in Illinois colleges and universities.

The IBHE report stated that the number of black professors also are on the decline.

Pettit said all universities should have a sufficient number of black professors to serve as role models to the black students.

"Perhaps the enrollment of black students is down because the number of black professors is down," Pettit said.

Senate kills plan to restrict Bush's talks with PLO

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate, under personal pressure from President Bush, voted Thursday to kill a plan he said could wreck efforts to achieve peace in the Middle East by virtually barring his talks with the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., said his defeated proposal was intended to stop U.S. contacts with PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat — "up to his armpits in all kinds of slaughter" — and other "terrorists who have on their hands the blood of the sons and daughters of America."

But Senate Democratic

leader George Mitchell of Maine and Republican leader Robert Dole of Kansas, with the support of two of Israel's strongest allies in the Senate, avoided a foreign policy embarrassment for Bush by uniting to defeat the restrictive language.

"If we want to truly help Israel, we will not tie the president's hands in his search for a viable way to achieve peace in the Middle East," Mitchell said.

"I do not want to be a party to anything stopping the peace process in its tracks," Dole said.

The Senate voted 75-23 to kill the proposal by Helms and then approved 97-1 — with only Helms in opposition — the language endorsed by Bush that gives the president the diplomatic flexibility and political cover to go on with the PLO talks in promotion of peace between Israel and the Palestinians living in the occupied territories.

The Helms's language was directly aimed at stopping further talks between Ambassador Robert Pelletreau in Tunis with Salah Khalaf, the No. 2 official in the PLO.

Khalaf is suspected of being a key figure in the massacre of Israeli athletes at the 1972

Munich Olympics and of having a role in the assassination of the U.S. ambassador to the Sudan, Cleo Noel, in 1973.

Israel and its powerful lobbying organization, the American Israel Public Affairs Committee, is pressuring the administration to break off the tentative talks it opened with the PLO after Arafat renounced terrorism and accepted the existence of the Jewish state last year.

Helms frustrated Bush for days with the proposed amendment to the State Department authorization bill — a measure Bush has already said he will veto unless it is stripped of other restrictions on his foreign policy powers.

The amendment said that there could be no talks with the PLO "unless and until the president certifies to Congress that he has determined the representative did not directly participate in, or conspire in, or was an accessory to, the planning or execution of a terrorist activity which resulted in the death, injury or kidnapping of an American citizen."

"Are we or are we not going to reward terrorists and terrorism?"

Veteran's groups ask Congress to protect the flag

WASHINGTON (UPI) — America's major veterans groups, armed with a new poll and some emotional rhetoric, called on Congress Thursday to act quickly and surely to protect the flag from desecration.

But along with the exhortations from the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars and the Disabled American Veterans, a House Judiciary subcommittee heard a former prisoner of war caution lawmakers to not damage the Constitution because of the flag issue. A Medal of Honor winner urged the lawmakers not to rush to action because of popular pressure.

Close by, near the Supreme Court, the atmosphere was more raucous as protesters on both sides of the issue competed for attention.

Several House members, supporters of a constitutional amendment to outlaw flag desecration, walked to the court with fire extinguishers because of speculation that a flag would be burned by the man whose 1984 flag burning in Texas prompted the Supreme Court's ruling on the issue. However, there was no flag burning or confrontation.

Inside the Capitol, the main question facing most lawmakers is not whether to try to reverse the high court's 5-4 decision that flag burning as a political protest is protected free speech, but what route to take.

President Bush has insisted that a constitutional change is needed, although a number of lawmakers, mostly Democrats, have suggested that the flag can be protected from desecration simply through a new federal law. A change in the Constitution, many lawmakers argue, could begin to erode First Amendment free speech protections.

However, the American Legion and the VFW, two of the most vocal groups in the flag debate, insisted Thursday that a change in the Constitution was required.

H.F. "Sparky" Gierke, Legion national commander, said, "We know in our gut that this is wrong."

Gierke told the panel the initial results of a Gallup Poll done for his organization that found 66 percent of those surveyed favored a constitutional amendment.

Pittston Coal Group refuses meeting with mine workers

DUFFIELD, Va. (UPI) — Striking United Mine Workers and the Pittston Coal Group resumed bargaining Thursday for a second day of federally mediated talks but recessed after 80 minutes when the company refused to meet the union face-to-face.

UMW Vice President Cecil Roberts expressed displeasure over the company's stance but said the union would spend the rest of the day drawing a new proposal for Friday's session.

"We think that if progress is going to be made in these negotiations, we need to sit across the table from each other," Roberts said.

Pittston and the UMW were brought together by a federal judge earlier this week and resume formal talks Wednesday. But the two sides remain in separate rooms in a motel while a federal mediator shuttles between them.

Joe Farrell, a Pittston Co. vice president, had no comment on the company's decision but said, "I understand they (UMW) will make a proposal and we look forward to that."

UMW President Richard Trumka has said he would lead the UMW's team at the bargaining table if Paul Douglas, chairman of The Pittston Co., also sat down. Douglas refuses. The Pittston

"We think that if progress is going to be made in these negotiations, we need to sit across the table from each other."

—Cecil Roberts

Coal Group is a subsidiary of the Greenwich, Conn.-based Pittston Co.

Pittston Coal Group President Michael Odom said Thursday both sides need to give if the 16-week-old, sometimes violent, dispute is to be resolved.

"There's no reason it should be a life-or-death struggle for either party, if the parties will change," Odom said on the NBC "Today" show.

Odom has said the company insists on establishing its own health care plan and will no longer contribute to the UMW health and retirement fund set up in 1950 to cover union retirees throughout the industry.

Trumka has said the union will not abandon its retirees and that Pittston's substitute plan will not meet the company's obligations to pensioned miners.

The UMW has also scored Pittston's effort to enforce an 80-20 health plan that would require miners to pay 20 percent of their health care costs.

Michael Buckner, UMW research director, said Thursday the health and retirement fund is not the only issue but "it's an emotional issue."

"We want them to fulfill their obligations and give the pensioners the 100 percent health benefits they paid for," he said.

Pittston officials have suggested the argument over pensions is a test to determine if the union is willing to shift from its earlier bargaining position.

About 1,700 Pittston miners in Virginia and West Virginia struck Pittston April 5 after working without a contract since January 1988.

Pittston is no longer part of the Bituminous Coal Operators Association, which has approved a national miners contract. Although Pittston is willing to pay a higher hourly wage than BCOA members, striking miners are unwilling to accept what they consider serious concessions in scheduling and benefits.

Dissent hits Solidarity over failure to block Jaruzelski

WARSAW, Poland (UPI) — A group of Solidarity lawmakers said Thursday the failure of the movement to block the election of Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski as president may result in rank-and-file defections and a loss of credibility with its members.

Jaruzelski received 270 votes of the 537 cast by legislators in the National Assembly Wednesday during a joint session of the new parliament, one more than the 269 he needed for victory. There were 233 votes against the Communist Party leader and 34 abstentions. Seven votes were declared invalid.

Members of the Solidarity block within parliament complained Thursday that if all its members present had voted against Jaruzelski, rather than abstaining or spoiling their ballots, he would have been defeated.

A total of 18 Solidarity legislators abstained with 222 voting against the general. Another seven Solidarity members defaced their ballots, which were declared invalid, and one voted for Jaruzelski. Eleven members were absent.

The close margin of victory demonstrated Jaruzelski did not have solid support from the multi-party Communist-led government coalition, which enjoys a comfortable majority in the National Assembly.

Solidarity has 161 members in the Sejm and 98 in the Senate, a minority of the total members but still the most significant opposition in a legislative body in the communist world.

The opposition movement that grew from the independent Solidarity labor union in the shipyards of Gdansk was allowed under an April 5 agreement with the communist leadership to run for only a minority of seats in 460-member lower house of parliament, the Sejm, and all 100 spots in the new Senate.

Barbara Labuda, a Solidarity deputy from the southwestern city of Wroclaw, said there was tension within local union ranks over the election outcome and the failure of Solidarity to band together to block it.

Labuda said Poland has experienced its final days of "social peace" now that Jaruzelski was back in power with plans for food price increases and more economic austerity.

"The people may start to renounce their membership in the union when they have become aware that Solidarity elected Jaruzelski," warned Edward Krasowski, a Solidarity deputy who voted against the general.

Stanislaw Bernatowicz, 80, was the only Solidarity parliamentarian who voted for Jaruzelski, a parliamentary source said.

Ryszard Brzuzy, a deputy from the coal-mining center of Belchatow, said he was quitting Solidarity to protest the lack of unity in the movement.

Solidarity parliamentarians met to discuss future strategy following Jaruzelski's win.

Jaruzelski outlined his agenda for solving Poland's economic crisis and his plans for a "new democratic order" Wednesday to the National Assembly moments after his election in the Communist-dominated legislature.

Guerrillas massacre 82 villagers in upsurge of civil war violence

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (UPI) — Right-wing guerrillas massacred 82 villagers in southern Mozambique and heavy fighting erupted near the South African border in an upsurge of violence undermining efforts to end a 13-year-old civil war, state-run media reported Thursday.

The massacre occurred Tuesday, a day after President Joaquim Chissano announced a church delegation acting on his behalf had flown to Nairobi to meet leaders of the Renamo rebels to lay the groundwork for peace talks.

The Mozambican news agency AIM said the Renamo guerrillas raided the village of Sanguane, about 25 miles north of the Indian Ocean coast, killing 82 peasants and wounding 111 others.

Twenty rebels were killed by security forces in pursuit operations, the agency reported.

It was the worst violence since July 19, 1987, when Renamo guerrillas attacked the farming town of Homoine in southern Mozambique. Estimates of the casualties in that attack ranged from at least 100 to more than 400.

Wednesday night, only hours after Chissano held talks with South Africa's ruling party leader Frederik de Klerk in Maputo, Renamo forces attacked troops of the ruling Frelimo party at the town of Ressano Garcia, 3 miles inside Mozambique, with small arms and mortar fire.

"Dozens of people were killed," state-run South African radio reported, quoting witnesses at the nearby South African town of Komatiport.

Police said 567 Mozambicans escaped to South Africa and one villager drowned in the Komati river while attempting to reach South Africa.

The timing of the two attacks following Chissano's peace overtures Monday and his Wednesday meeting with De Klerk appeared more than a coincidence and demonstrated the difficulties ahead in ending a war that has claimed more than 100,000 lives.

South Africa once actively backed Renamo as part of a policy to destabilize neighboring black-ruled states that supported the outlawed African National Congress's guerrilla war against minority white rule.

Pretoria insists that its support for Renamo ended in 1984 when the two nations signed a non-aggression pact. When President Pieter W. Botha met Chissano last September he reaffirmed South Africa's commitment to help rebuild the war-ravaged nation.

Foreign military pacts in Cambodia renounced by national assembly

BANGKOK, Thailand (UPI) — The Vietnamese-installed government of Cambodia has renounced all foreign military pacts in a statement of "permanent neutrality" published Thursday.

The resolution made no mention of the estimated 50,000 to 70,000 Vietnamese troops still based in Cambodia nor did it mention a 25-year treaty of friendship and cooperation with Vietnam.

Analysts, however, assumed the neutrality statement means the abrogation of that accord, which includes a clause on defense.

"The statement of the Cambodian national assembly on the permanent neutrality is guaranteed by the constitution of the state of Cambodia and comes into effect from now on," said an English-language text of the resolution carried by the official news agency SPK.

The resolution was passed last Thursday by the one-party Cambodian assembly as part of an effort to improve the image of the government before peace talks scheduled to open in Paris Monday.

It said Cambodia would "refrain from involving itself in any alliance or military bloc detrimental to the neutrality of Cambodia."

"The state of Cambodia shall not allow any military bloc to install its bases on Cambodia's territory," it said.

Vietnam invaded Cambodia in 1978, ousted the pro-Chinese Khmer Rouge government and installed the government currently headed by Prime Minister Hun Sen.

The Vietnamese troops are scheduled to withdraw completely by the end of September.

Hanoi's forces, which once numbered about 200,000 men, has been unable to eliminate a three-party resistance coalition headed by Prince Norodom Sihanouk.

The involvement in Cambodia has drained Vietnam's meager coffers, deprived the economy of desperately needed aid and trade, and exhausted the patience of the Soviet Union.

In Bangkok Thursday, Chinese Deputy Foreign Minister Liu Shu Xin met with Thai Foreign Minister Siddhi Savetsila to discuss an international conference on Cambodia set to follow the four-party Cambodian peace talks.

Siddhi told reporters that Thailand and China agreed to work for a comprehensive solution in Cambodia.

Lawyers' group finds seatbelt, motorboat faults

BOSTON (UPI) — Hundreds of people are being needlessly injured or killed each year by government and industry failure to require simple safety improvements in automobile seat belts and boat engines, a lawyers' association charged Thursday.

The Institute for Injury Reduction called for the mandatory installation of shoulder harnesses on all rear-seat auto safety belts, and the elimination of "windowshade" front-seat shoulder harnesses that allow excess slack in the seatbelts.

The institute also complained that none of the motorboat engines sold commercially in the United States come with simple protective blade guards, and that boaters who want to install one have a very hard time finding them.

The institute, headquartered in Dunkirk, Md., made the charges as part of this week's national conference in Boston of the Association of Trial Lawyers of America.

Its complaints follow an announcement last month by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, which said it would require the rear-seat shoulder harnesses on all new cars within six months.

NHTSA spokesman Tim Hurd said Thursday, however, that there is "no indication that the windowshade device is a problem" responsible for an increased rate of injuries.

Hurd said the windowshade device actually has been responsible for a dramatic increase in the use of safety belts, since people often would not wear the belts if they restricted their movement.

But institute president Benjamin Kelley said foreign cars are equipped with a less expensive version that also allows the wearer freedom of movement while automatically pulling tight once the person resumes their original sitting position.

Kelley also said the rear-seat shoulder harness should be required on all existing cars, since all cars built since 1972 have points where they could be readily installed.

Both changes, involving the rear-seat safety harnesses and the elimination of the windowshade device, would cost about $30 per car for automobiles already on the road, he said.

The government does not keep exact figures on motor boat propeller injuries, but the institute believes the unshielded blades cause hundreds and perhaps thousands of injuries each year to swimmers and boaters, some fatal and many horribly disfiguring or disabling, Kelley said.

In addition, the unguarded motor boat engines are a leading cause of injury to manatees, the large sea-going mammals often found off the Florida coast, Kelley said.

Report: Work-related nerve ailments on the rise

ATLANTA (UPI) — People who use repetitive hand movements on the job, such as typists and carpenters, increasingly suffer from a nerve ailment that causes numbness and requires corrective surgery in the worst cases, federal health researchers said Thursday.

The national Centers for Disease Control, basing its conclusions on a study done in Santa Clara County, Calif., said 47 percent of the reported cases of carpal tunnel syndrome were work-related.

"We really don't have good data on how often this problem occurs, but it appears the problem is getting worse," said Thomas Matte, a CDC medical epidemiologist. "It's a combination of carpal tunnel syndrome being more common and more commonly recognized."

"There certainly is a lot it but exactly how much, I don't think we can say," he said.

CTS is a condition caused by frequent repetitive or forceful use of the hand or wrist, regular tasks requiring awkward hand positions and regular use of vibrating hand-held tools. Such uses of the hand compress and irritate a nerve that passes through the carpal tunnel in the wrist, the CDC said.

"Without intervention, CTS can lead to marked discomfort, impaired hand function and disability," the federal health agency said. "Workers who perform such repetitive tasks are at risk for CTS and include garment workers, butchers, grocery checkers, electronics assembly workers, typists, musicians, packers, housekeepers, cooks and carpenters."

Researchers first began linking CTS to work-related injuries in the 1960s, a time the frequency of the condition was increasing due to a combination of factors, CDC said.

"First, the nature of work is changing," he said. "We have a lot more people in service occupations, where they are using keyboards. There is much more automation in the work place, so rapid assembly line jobs are more common."

Activists wary about new AIDS drug proposal

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Top federal health leaders embraced an initiative Thursday to widen the availability of experimental AIDS drugs, but activists said the plan must be followed by strong action in order to succeed.

Testifying before a congressional panel, Assistant Health Secretary Dr. James Mason said he supported suggestions to establish a "parallel track" system of drug testing to give people with AIDS quicker access to promising treatments.

Under such a plan, AIDS patients unable to participate in government-monitored tests required for drug approval would receive promising medicines free while more traditional testing continued. The government would collect safety information about patients on the "second track," but with less rigorous monitoring than during conventional drug trials.

Mason told a House Energy and Commerce subcommittee that he asked the Food and Drug Administration to form an advisory committee to iron out details of the new initiative. The panel will report back no later than Aug. 21, he said.

Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., agreed that officials must be careful in crafting a parallel drug testing system.

"If it works, it could revolutionize drug development. If it fails, it could cripple AIDS research for some time," Waxman said.

Martin Delaney, co-director of Project Inform, a San Francisco AIDS support group, called the proposal "helpful in theory."

'Do the Right Thing' protests all aspects of racial prejudice

By Carrie Pomeroy
Staff Writer

Film Review

Spike Lee's "Do the Right Thing" is a roaring siren of a film, protesting against all forms of racial prejudice. Film critics have speculated that the film could make audiences to riot, which indicates its powerful impact.

Producer, director, writer and co-star Lee has created a vibrant, colorful tapestry that literally steams with life. The setting of his film, one block in New York City's Bedford-Stuyvesant neighborhood on the hottest day of the summer, provides a perfect cross-section of ethnic city people, all of whom come into conflict in some way.

Lee, whose previous credits include "She's Gotta Have It" and "School Daze," plays Mookie, a pizza delivery man who always manages to sidestep trouble and responsibility. Compromising with his racially prejudiced Italian-American employer, Sal, while half-heartedly supporting the activism of his radical black friends, Mookie never really takes a stand.

Taking a stand becomes inevitable as racial tensions in the neighborhood build up like a summer storm.

One of the film's main strengths is that it depicts many aspects of racism. While the tragedy of white people's prejudice against blacks is the main issue in the film, blacks' racism against Asian immigrants, and prejudice between blacks, is also depicted in detail.

One of the film's most effective sequences shows various people spouting ugly racist aspersions in a spiraling cycle of hatred. Lee effectively gets across the point that everyone is guilty of some kind of racism.

The film is practically a crash course in African-American history, invoking many black heroes and heroines. The film's initial conflict occurs when Buggin' Out, played with nerve and energy by Giancarlo Esposito, complains to pizzeria owner Sal that only Italians and no blacks are featured on his restaurant's "Wall Of Fame."

The film, which is informed with references to political leaders such as Martin Luther King, Malcolm X and Jesse Jackson, and popular heroes such as baseball player Jackie Robinson, seem to be an attempt to build a "Wall Of Fame" in which blacks can take pride.

"My heroes aren't on a postage stamp," the rap group Public Enemy states in the film's theme song, "Fight the Power."

"Do the Right Thing" is definitely an ensemble effort.

No one actor or actress stands out more than another. Speaking dialogue that percolates with the jazzy rhythms of life, the film's energetic, youthful cast sometimes shows its inexperience, but is usually highly convincing.

Danny Aiello brings Sal to life, despite the fact that Lee's script often depicts the character as little more than a caricature of Italian-American mannerisms and stereotypes.

Ossie Davis and Ruby Dee star as the neighborhood's elders, Da Mayor and Mother Sister, bringing great authority, humor and skill to their roles.

"Do the Right Thing" is a painful, honest film that forces each audience member to examine his or her preconceived notions about other people. It ends on an ambivalent note, closing with a quote from Martin Luther King that protests against violence and a quote from Malcolm X condoning violence in self-defense.

The film's pivotal character, Radio Raheem, sums up the movie's themes when he explains to Mookie why he wears brass knuckles that say "love" on his right hand and "hate" on his left.

"The one hand is always fighting the other," he says. On a note of hope, he speculates that the right hand will always come out on top.

New TV show looking for videos

Home video buffs now have a chance to show their work on a local TV station.

WSIL-TV is looking for home video highlights to air on a new segment called "Hometown Highlights."

"Hometown Highlights" features sporting events of local interest that news crews can't always get to. It airs during the 5 p.m. sports segment of News 3.

"Right now, I air a different piece two or three times a week, because the series is new. Hopefully, in the near future, the idea will catch on and I will have a video to air every night. That's our goal," Mark Kiesling, sports director, said.

Nearly anything goes—ball games, cheerleading camps, golf tournaments, even a family sporting event that you would like to share with everyone.

"I'm really happy with what I've received so far. There's been a good variety—softball, go-cart and midget racing, cheerleading camps, old-timers basketball, and someone even sent video from The Prairie State Games in Champaign."

To submit a video send the tape, name, return address, phone number and some information about the event to "Hometown Highlights" WSIL-TV, 3 Route 13, Carterville, IL 62918.

Danny Cox hopes for return next year

By Dan O'Neill
St. Louis Post-Dispatch

Months have passed since St. Louis pitcher Danny Cox was in the news. Slider-slinging, pest-punching, bass-busting, camera-crunching, right arm-rehabbing Danny Cox.

Remember him? It's been nearly a year since Cox gripped the seams in a big-league game. His last official appearance was Aug. 7, 1988.

He tried pitching this spring, but the elbow pain that limited him to 13 appearances last year resurfaced. The result was surgery and goodbye to 1989.

Rather, there was one thing left. A dispirited Cox turned bad news turn into a bad scene when he bowled over a persistent television cameraman at the airport. The incident made newspaper headlines and television teasers for days.

ALREADY SIDELINED. Cox became an outlaw. All of it seems hazy now.

The Cardinals, with their patchwork pitching staff, have managed to stay in the N.L. East pennant race. The moans about missing players have faded. Cox is no longer in the picture.

But he's around. He's in the clubhouse, making chatter. He's on the field, snagging fly balls. He's on the bench. He's leading the cheers for his teammates.

"I cheer for the guys anyway," Cox said. "When I wasn't pitching before, I'd always be on the bench cheering. This is no different." But this has been very different.

"When you've played baseball every summer of your life since you were a kid," Cox said, "you say to yourself, 'Why am I not playing?' It's always in your mind. But you just have to live with that. The biggest thing I miss is going out there every fifth day."

COX HAS BEGUN to throw — every other day for 15 minutes. He still has numbness in two fingers, but his doctor has assured him it will clear up. Overall, his arm is starting to feel good.

Dangerously good. "My arm feels good and I say to myself, 'Dan, let me just throw one as hard as I can. Just one,'" Cox said. "But I know the negative things that would come from it. I'm not going to pitch this year. I just have to keep telling myself that I'm not going to push it."

However, circumstances are trying to tell him otherwise. Danny Cox finds it harder to listen to Danny Cox.

"The team is in a pennant race and it's tough," Cox said. "I think to myself maybe I could make it back and I'd be day to day. And then there would be a situation where I would say, 'I'm not feeling too good today,' but I'd go out and have to get a batter out. I'd reach back for something extra and the result would be disastrous."

"A STEP AT A time, that's the way I have to approach it.

If I want to continue my career in baseball, I have to do it this way."

Career-wise, this lost season couldn't have come at a worse time. Cox is in the last year of his contract and becomes a free agent at the end of the season. Another potential free agent, Montreal lefthander Mark Langston, is expected to launch the salary scale to a new stratosphere. With a good season, Cox would have been in position to ride the financial tide.

But Cox, 29, won't be swayed by champagne wishes and caviar dreams. He's more of a beer-and-burger type anyway. At the moment, he is more concerned with how well he plays than how well he's paid.

"I feel like I have a lot of good years in me," Cox said. "I'd love to play here. If they want to go with someone else, I can understand that. But I know I'm going to pitch next year."

"IT'S TOUGH for me because I don't have any bargaining power. But if I come back and show them I can pitch, I'll have a lot of years left. Hopefully, they'll take that into consideration."

Cox doesn't just want to be back. He wants to be better.

"I'm working out a lot, running and lifting a lot of weights," Cox said. "I want to be in the best physical shape I can be. I can't pitch, but now I can push myself in other areas. When I come back, I'll be stronger than I've ever been."

In a public-relations sense, Cox probably has benefited from the sabbatical. The cameraman caper was a nightmare. Fans were upset. Call-in shows were buzzing.

The incident painted the 6-foot-4, 225-pound Cox as a hotheaded bully. If he was playing, the affair would have lingered much longer.

IN RETROSPECT, it's hard to believe the skirmish ever took place. A guy wondering how Danny Cox is doing these days can find out simply by asking. Cox is accommodating, down to earth and just plain likable.

He is a man of pride and old-fashioned morals. Cox believes in tackling problems head on and the airport fiasco still gripes him.

"I'd rather be pitching and I'd rather face that," Cox said. "That guy ended up suing me. To me, that wasn't right. They got exactly what they wanted. They asked me to apologize and I sat down man to man and talked it out with him. And when we were done, we shook hands and he said everything was all right."

"Then I turn around and the next thing I know, I get a piece of paper in the mail saying he's suing me. That's pretty frustrating."

Now Cox is feeling better, making progress and getting antsy.

Olympic star slams drugs, medicocracy

OKLAHOMA CITY (UPI) — Lee Evans entered the U.S. Olympic Hall of Fame Thursday railing against the "mediocre" athletes who resort to drugs to enhance performances.

Evans and fellow track stars Bobby Morrow and the late Mel Sheppard were joined by boxer Joe Frazier, weightlifter John Davis and the entire 1960 U.S. Olympic hockey team in the 1989 class of the hall of fame. Also inducted was ABC-TV executive Rooney Arledge, who was named in the special contributor category.

The latest inductees were introduced in a ceremony in conjunction with the U.S. Olympic Festival.

Evans, who won gold medals and set world records in the 400-meter dash and 1,600-meter relay during the 1968 Olympics in Mexico City, said he was offered steroids in 1970. He declined the offer "because why did I need them? Even the guy who was taking them, I was still beating him in competition."

ROCKY, from Page 16

John. He had a partner, Ron, who was down below. John asked if we would not like to join him in careening off the face of this mountain hanging by a thread.

I heard myself say, "Sure." Before I knew it, I found myself harnessed up and receiving instructions from John. John was the type of guy who could say things that weren't that funny, but who am I to blow against the wind. He told you things not to do, by giving you examples of people who did do them and paid for their mistakes. Kind of like my Mom.

"See what you're doing there with the rope," John said. "Bill Parks did that once and now he has to wear a training wheel on his right side to keep him from walking in circles."

John was actually a pretty good teacher. He kept on insisting that he had not had anyone die on him yet, so why start now. I concurred.

As I got to the edge of the cliff my spider-sense started tingling. Spiderman had a spider-sense and it alerted him when danger was around.

My spider-sense was going wild. It was telling me: "I know what you're going to do, and I'm just going on record as saying stop now you idiot."

Then there's that other voice in your head that says to just jump right off. It's the same impulse that I keep under check whenever I see fire alarms. My right arm wants to reach up and pull the little red bugger. I suppress these images, but the fact that part of me wants to jump is a bit unsettling.

I start walking backwards towards the edge with my lifeline firmly gripped behind my back and I realize that there is no turning back.

I always figured that on your first time they send you down with an old pro. When I went they sent my roommate and I together — two rookies.

Larkin scurried down much quicker than I did, but I didn't look down to check. I figured that he had some death wish or something.

I like my life. I stayed on the first 10 feet over the edge talking to Crazy John — he liked being called crazy. He introduced himself as, "I'm John, I'm crazy." I kept hoping that one of us hadn't forgot something.

As I talked to him I edged myself down and before I knew it I was 20 feet down. I know I'm a wimp, but I walked down like Adam West's Batman rather than bouncing down.

It occurred to me that I was so scared to enjoy this. I decided to look at something other than the square foot area around my feet. I glanced quicker than a viper's snap at the foliage. Nice trees.

I passed Ron on the way down in a cave. He was preoccupied with something and just laughed when he saw my brave face.

Down, down, down until suddenly the earth was beneath my toes.

Thank you God.

I yelped. I hugged the ground. I high-fived my roommates. I revelled in my accomplishment as long as I could without annoying the other creatures in the woods.

I went back up the trail and did it again. Heck, it's only 175 feet. I bounced and jumped and thoroughly enjoyed myself this time.

When we got back to town I wondered why there weren't banners in the streets welcoming us home. I felt good. I want to do it again as soon as I can.

Now repelling will become a commonplace occurrence to me. It will never be as fun as the first time. I am a virgin no more. Now all I need to do is stumble across a skydiver.

Laurent Fignon widens his lead in Tour de France

VILLARD DE LANS, France (UPI) — Tour de France leader Laurent Fignon succeeded in a 14-mile breakaway Thursday to win the 18th stage of cycling's most famous race and widen his overall lead to 50 seconds.

Fignon covered the 57-mile stage from Bourg d'Oisans to Villard de Lans in 2 hours, 31 minutes, 28 seconds, beating his closest rivals, including American Greg LeMond, by 24 seconds.

"The stage itself wasn't that difficult, but it was run at a very high rhythm," he said.

The Frenchman, winner of the Tour of Italy, pulled away at the peak at Saint Nizier de Mouchotte, building a lead of 52 seconds before his pursuers narrowed the gap.

A pack of five led by Dutchman Steven Rooks pulled to within 24 seconds at the finish, with Gert-Jan Theunisse of Holland third, Marino Lejarreta of Spain fourth and Sean Kelly of Ireland fifth.

LeMond placed sixth, in the group of pursuers, retaining second place overall at 50 seconds behind.

Spain's Pedro Delgado, the 1988 winner, was seventh in the stage at 33 seconds back. He held third place overall but fell 2:28 behind Fignon.

The stage featured three major ascents, and was run in temperatures in the 80s.

It was the first stage won by Fignon, and the 28-year-old Parisian solidified his lead with three stages to go. Aware of LeMond's likely strength in the against-the-clock finale Sunday, he had been seeking to increase his lead in the Alps.

On Friday, the 140 riders face the next-to-last day in the Alps in a 76-mile stage from Villard de Lans to Aix-les-Bains, which includes four difficult climbs, including one rated in the most difficult category.

Unknown leads in Brit Open

Wayne Stephens 2 strokes ahead of Trevino, Couples, Azinger

TROON, Scotland (UPI) — Little-known Wayne Stephens of Britain surprised the world's best golfers with a blistering attack of sun-baked Royal Troon Thursday, carding a 6-under par 66 to take the first round lead in the British Open.

Aided by unusually mild weather, Stephens posted six birdies and not a single bogey to grab a two-stroke lead over a group of seven that included Americans Lee Trevino, Fred Couples and Paul Azinger.

Trevino, who had six birdies and two bogeys, needed only one putt on each of the last five holes.

"I guess it's just that I'm playing a lot," Trevino said of his putting success. "The nerves are good."

Trevino, who turns 50 in December, said the sun-baked Royal Troon course suited his game.

"This is the type of golf course I think I can hold on," said Trevino, who faded after leading the first round of the Masters last April. "My advantage is hitting the low bump and run. I can hit as low as anybody."

Couples, who notched five birdies, said he wasn't surprised that the light winds and sunny weather had not produced the predicted low scores.

"There's no wind and there's not much rough, but it's like a rock out there," said Couples, who hasn't won a tournament this year. "You've got to earn your birdies."

Others posting 68 were Australia's Wayne Grady, Argentina's Eduardo Romero and Spain's Jose-Maria Olazabal and Miguel Martin.

Five-time British Open champion Tom Watson of the United States and Australia's Greg Norman were in a group of eight with 3-under 69s.

Norman, who has suffered from a wrist injury this year, said better putting was the key to his round.

"Putting has not been my strength of late," he said. "I made a few changes, and I felt confident and felt I was going to make putts. I just widened my stance a little and kept my body a little bit firmer, not so much movement, and it seemed to work pretty well," he said.

Ireland's Philip Walton also finished at 69, along with Britain's Brian Marchbank, Mark James and Derrick Coope, and American Steve Falek.

U.S. Open Champion Curtis Strange was four shots back of Stephens with a 70.

Strange posted birdies at the fourth and sixth and was one-under par 34 for the front nine. Another birdie at the 11th — where a railroad track stretches down the right side and the out of bounds wall is only a few feet from the green — momentarily put him 3-under. But, Strange took a bogey-4 at the 14th before paring the final four.

Strange said the 7,097-yard, par-72 Royal Troon course, dried-out by months of sunshine, called for a completely different game than rain-sodden Oak Hill in Rochester, N.Y., where he won the U.S. Open.

"Here, the yardage you're most concerned about is in front of the green," Strange said. "We're playing short and going for the bounce."

However, he thought the conditions would have allowed some lower scores.

"I felt I should have done a little better," Strange said. "I'm surprised that somebody's not 7- or 8-under-par out there."

Tom Kite also finished with a 70, including a triple-bogey seven at the 457-yard 15th when he drove his tee shot out of bounds.

"The front nine was easy, a piece of cake," Kite said. "All of a sudden I started having a little trouble with my driver."

CBA official among missing in plane crash

COLUMBUS, Ohio (UPI) — The commissioner of the Continental Basketball Association was among those unaccounted for Thursday in the plane crash in Sioux City, Iowa, that left as many as 117 people feared dead.

Commissioner Jay Ramsdell, 25, and Deputy Commissioner Jerry Schmelmer were flying from the league's headquarters in Denver to Columbus aboard United Flight 232 that crashed Wednesday.

Schmelmer was listed as one of the survivors but Ramsdell was still missing Thursday afternoon.

The 16 CBA owners said they will hold their two-day draft despite the crash. Schmelmer was to return to Denver Thursday and miss the draft.

"The crash will have no effect on the operations of the draft," said Tim Sise, general manager of the Columbus Horizon. "Tonight we're looking at some of the best basketball players and to halt the growth of the league is something he (Ramsdell) wouldn't have wanted."

"He's spent much of his life in the CBA and the owners decided it was his best interest that we go through with it."

Ramsdell served as a statistician with the CBA's Maine Lumberjacks in 1976. A few years later he began working for the Lumberjacks. In 1982, at age 18, he left to become the CBA's public relations director.

He was elected deputy commissioner under Carl Scheer in 1985. He stayed until 1987 when Scheer went to the Charlotte Hornets of the NBA and was replaced by Mike Storn. In 1988, when Storn left, Ramsdell was named commissioner.

Four expansion teams participated in a lottery to determine the order in which they will draft. San Jose won the No. 1 choice. Other expansion teams are Sioux Falls, Santa Barbara and Grand Rapids.

Omaha won second after trading with Sioux Falls, which got Omaha's sixth position. Third went to Santa Barbara, then Grand Rapids and Topeka.

Browns' owner slams voting block

MENTOR, Ohio (UPI) — Cleveland Browns owner Art Modell said Thursday the NFL is a healthier league now that the rift between owners appears to be healed, but he warned that owners should not band together solely to block an issue.

Modell spoke after returning from an owners' meeting outside Chicago in which the 11 dissidents who blocked the election of Jim Finks as commissioner were appeased after gaining two spots on the search committee.

Modell was on the original six-man committee that recommended Finks, but he resigned from the committee to make room for new members.

"This league cannot function with a voting block," Modell said as the Browns went through their first day of two-day practices under coach Bud Carson. "You can't have people sit down and say 'Let's get together and say no to what's going to happen tomorrow.'"

"We've had eight no votes over the years, but for diverse reasons. Never as part of a form of collusion."

In an effort to further bridge the gap between owners, Modell offered to resign his role in negotiating the league's television contracts, but agreed to stay on in that role only after gaining assurances from the 11 owners who blocked Finks's election that they would not form another coalition.

"I think we made a giant step toward breaching the gap between the young Turks, the Chicago 11 1/2, or whatever you want to call them, and the so-called old guard," Modell said. "They should be able to flex their muscles, they have the same vote I do, but it's like a group boycott when they join together."

"It's unhealthy for the league. I could come in with a television report next March and eight of them, you don't need 10, eight of them could say it's not enough money, we want a new committee to go out and negotiate a new contract. Then where are we? I was promised it won't happen. I believe it."

The new search committee members are AFC President Lamar Hunt of Kansas City and NFC President Wellington Mara of the Giants, considered part of the old-guard faction; Minnesota's Mike Lynn and Seattle's Ken Behring, part of the dissident faction; and the Raiders' Al Davis and Washington's John Cooke.

Although the nomination of Finks was blocked, Modell believes Finks eventually will be named to succeed Pete Rozelle.

"I think he's a healthier candidate today than he was (Wednesday) morning," Modell said. "I think his candidacy is very much alive and kicking. (Wednesday) I was pretty pessimistic about it."

In the 1980s, nine teams have been sold, Modell said, and the new owners fit a different mold than owners such as Modell.

shape will help the team in the fall also. "This will get us a little more momentum going into the fall."

New Rugby President Steve Brady could not agree more. "This helps us. I just hope the guys who stayed at home aren't just drinking beers and watching baseball."

Brady thinks that the team has a good shot at a superior season in the fall. "All of our guys are returning except one. He broke his neck."

Not making a diving tackle with his face though, Ruggier Paul Werd hurt himself on a waterslide back home during the summer break, according to Brady.

"He went down head first, which I guess you're not supposed to do," Brady explained. Even without Ward, the team is ranked second by the Midwest Rugby Union going into the fall.

Venue arguments heard in Rose case

COLUMBUS, Ohio (UPI) — Pete Rose's lawyer told a federal judge Thursday the manager deserves to have his case heard in a Cincinnati state court in an effort to clear himself of gambling allegations that could ban him from baseball.

But lawyers for Commissioner A. Bartlett Giamatti said the lawsuit against the commissioner requires the issue be decided in federal court because of Rose's enormous popularity in Cincinnati.

The parties argued for nearly two hours before Judge

Judge won't make ruling until at least July 31

John Holschuh of U.S. District Court. He said he will not rule until at least July 31 whether to grant Rose's motion to remand the case back to Hamilton County Common Pleas Court.

"Peter Rose, notwithstanding that he is a legend, is entitled to have the same legal standards applied to him as any individual," said Robert Stachler, Rose's lawyer.

Stachler was responding to complaints by the commissioner that local prejudice and bias toward the Cincinnati Reds manager would prevent a fair verdict in a Cincinnati court.

Stachler said moving the case into the federal system would place the burden on major-league baseball of showing there is no possibility Rose has a cause of action in state court.

But Louis Hoynes, Giamatti's lawyer, said Rose is "a local hero, perhaps a first citizen of Cincinnati. Commissioner Giamatti is viewed suspiciously as a foreigner from New York, trapped in an ivory tower."

Hoynes said the essence of the case as been "masked and deformed by artful pleading" of Rose's lawyers to avoid federal jurisdiction.

Rose has sued Giamatti to block a disciplinary hearing, claiming the commissioner is biased and has prejudged him.

The hearing, originally scheduled for May 25, concerned a 225-page report showing Rose wagered on baseball games, including those involving the Reds. Rose could be suspended for a year if he bet on baseball games, and for life if he wagered on the Reds.

Stachler told Holschuh that Giamatti had not followed major-league baseball's disciplinary procedures. Afterward, he declined to elaborate, saying that would have to await arguments on the merits of Rose's suit.

"The entire controversy is between Peter Rose, a citizen of Cincinnati, and Commissioner Giamatti, a citizen of New York," he said.

Rappelling just another challenge

I am not afraid of heights.

I'm afraid of falling.

Tired from the night before and hot, my roommates and I headed out to Little Grand Canyon with one harness, some clips, a pair of mismatched gloves and a rope that my roommate was afraid to use until he found out the price of a new one.

We had decided to go rappelling. I have never done it and neither had my bunkie Ted Larkin. We were relying on Tom Kostka, a veteran of at least a dozen jumps.

As we traveled down the gravel roads to the Canyon there as I refused to contemplate exactly what I was about to do. Instead, I focused on the hair of the dog, so to speak.

I endured their moans about the two-mile trek to the edge of the bluff as we carried our gear. If you have never been to the Canyon don't go. It is truly a wonder and a bunch of interlopers would spoil the scenery.

We climbed out onto the precarious edge of Chalk Bluff and sat in silence. Indians. We felt like what we imagined the Native Americans must have felt looking at the raw beauty of nature.

Then release. I was informed that this was far too high for our rope of 125 feet. I feigned disappointment and assured the lads that I had been ready to risk it all. Too bad.

We waxed poetic on the face of the bluff for awhile talking about everything from the beauty of the larch to whether or not Bruce Lee could have defeated Mike Tyson. I picked Tyson.

Then we decided to take the trail into the valley. We got no further than 20 feet down the lane, when our paths crossed with destiny. "A rappeller guy, how nice to see you rappeller guy," I said.

It was like finding out your sister is going to marry Don King. Fear.

Firemen keep active on rocks

For two local firefighters, rappelling is not just a job, it's also fun.

For Danny Martin, from the Anna Fire Department, and Dan Daily, from the Wolf Lake department, the knowledge and experience they gain from rappelling is a valuable asset if an emergency ever arises.

Martin said he started rappelling so he will be prepared if an emergency ever occurs involving someone stranded or injured on a cliff or ridge. "It is something more to know about if we are ever in this kind of situation," he said.

Rappelling consists of tying a rope to a sturdy object (something strong enough to support the weight of a person) and dropping the rope over the edge of a cliff. The rope is drawn through a harness worn by the person who descends down the face of the bluff. The friction of the rope attached to the harness is used to control the speed of the descent.

"We come out here (Giant City State Park) to train and also for the fun of it," Martin said. "It's challenging. It's a rush. Just buckle up and go over the top."

Martin said he estimates the height of the bluffs at 95 feet. He said he is not comfortable with heights but when he straps on the harness he has nothing to worry about. "You just have to watch your step on the way down."

"When you back off the ridge, it's not any different than walking along the ground. You have the rope in your hands to control your speed and you are constantly looking at the rocks, so you know where to put your feet. As long as you don't look down you're all right."

Daily said he was pretty scared his first time down the bluff, but he has gained more confidence each time he tackles the cliff.

"It's not the fall that would hurt. It's the impact," Daily jokingly said.

Rugby to compete in St. Louis tourney

The SIU-C Rugby Club heads for St. Louis Saturday to compete in their second tournament of the season and to try and improve on their record.

Coach Steve Montez thinks that the team will fare much better than it did two weeks ago at a tournament in Milwaukee, where the ruggers won just one out of four matches.

"The things we worked on in practice are not as foreign to them now that they've done it in a game," Montez said. Many of the players had never played "sevens" before the Milwaukee match he noted.

Sevens is the same game as rugby, except that each side has seven players instead of 15. The game, according to Montez, was invented so that teams could compete in the summer despite a drought of players.

"We'll only have 11 or 12 guys going with us. Everyone will get a chance to play," he said.

He said it would be a smaller tournament with about 12 teams registered. "I imagine all the St. Louis mens clubs will be there. Also there will be some college sides."

Montez said he expects Washington University, St. Louis University and Missouri to have clubs at the tournament. The Salukis are in the dark about where they will be placed in the bracket until they arrive at the rugby pitch Saturday morning.

"You get some teams dropping out or showing up with half a squad. Those teams usually just combine," Montez said.

He said thinks the team will be ready for whoever they play. "Some of the guys were really surprised at how good of shape their in," he said after the Milwaukee experience.

"We've been drilling in 80-90 degree weather all summer. It really helped us out. And it's supposed to be cool this weekend."

Montez said he thinks that having a nucleus of players in
